De Wolf Hopper's final appearances here this afternoon and evening at English's in Thief Enters Last Evening During "Dr. Syntax" will give Indianapolis the last opportunities to see that clever production. Mr. Hopper will produce Sousa's new opera, "El Capitan" in New York in April. It is said the talented Edna Wallace Hopper will have a part in the forthcoming production which will enable her to make the "hit of ever to be styled a twin orb to her successful husband. The new opera, which has been under rehearsal for some time, will be more of an opera than anything in which Hopper has been cast since "Wang" and his pre-eminent singing voice will have full scope in the line best suited to this recog-nized great comedian.

At the Grand's matinee this afternoon James O'Neill will appear in "The Courier of Lyons." Its plot, in brief, deals with a remarkable story of mistaken identity. An honest French citizen is accused of murder and sentenced to death, owing to his fatal resemblance to a famous scoundrel. Through the ingenuity of his daughter and her betrothed he is, however, saved from the gallows. The play is of a decidedly romantic character and the author has taken pains in evolving situations wherein Mr. Q'Neill's sympathetic qualities find fair expression. It will be finely staged.

The unexpected death yesterday of Edward E. Paddock, of this city, removes a bright and versatile young genius, who was destined to make his mark as a dramatic writer. He was unusually gifted for one so young, and had just completed a libretto for a comic opera that has much merit and which his friends will likely have the pathetic pleasure of seeing produced at mo

He was about to fire his revolver, when he caught sight of a dinner bucket and recognized the man as a baker working next door. At 3 o'clock Shepherd heard the sound of more breaking glass and got back into the store room in time to hear a man running away. He was satisfied no further effort would be made to rob his place that night and left a large wooden clock in front of the hole. At 5:30 he was awakened by another crash, and when he got into the store found the clock a dozen feet from the window. Shepherd says this is the third attempt to rob in the past month.
